About Vet. Surgical Resources' Products

Vet. Surgical Resources offers an extensive line of disposable drapes for both small and large animal surgical procedures. To assist you in making the best choice for your needs, please see the general information below, regarding materials, construction, and sterilization of our products.

Sterilization – Sterile products offered by Vet. Surgical Resources are either ETO or gamma sterilized with careful laboratory control and traceability to ensure sterility. Drapes and kits are over-wrapped and placed in either header pouches or peel-pouches for sterilization.

Quality control – We process all of our products in adherence with a rigorous quality control system, ensuring that our customers may use our products with confidence.

Drape folding – Drapes are fan-folded and open to the short dimension first. Drapes folded to open to the long dimension first are noted in the drape descriptions and by the addition of the suffix “-1” to the product number. For example, 6011-1 denotes a 55” X 77” drape opening to the long dimension first. An “A” in the drape number indicates Impervex material with the poly side folded away from the patient.

Non-sterile products – Many Vet. Surgical Resources drapes may be purchased non-sterile for practices wishing to assemble their own kits. Drapes of spunlace medical fabric, SMS, and wetlaid may be either ETO sterilized or autoclaved. Products made from our Impervex material must be either ETO or gamma sterilized.

Special drapes and custom kits – To meet your special needs, we would be happy to provide quotes on kits of drapes and other components as well as drape configurations not shown here.

Specifications – We continue to improve our products and reserve the right to change the specifications of our products without notice. For our most up to date product listings please view our online catalog at www.vetsurgicalresources.com.

Materials –

Spunlace medical fabric – This spunlaced material is widely used in both drapes and gowns in the human field. Because of its softness, Spunlace medical fabric has excellent draping characteristics and will resist tearing when fenestrated for surgery. Spunlace medical fabric is not impervious, but is treated to minimize moisture penetration. Autoclavable.

Impervex medical fabric, Vet. Surgical Resources' impervious material – Spunlace medical fabric laminated with polyethylene film. Our Impervex material builds on the draping qualities of spunlace medical fabric by adding a completely impervious film. This film is an effective viral barrier, reduces linting, and aids in forming a seal at the surgical site when fenestrated at the time of surgery.

SMS material – This material is formed from three layers of polypropylene fibers welded together to form the completed product. It exhibits good tear resistance, low linting, and is treated for moisture resistance. Autoclavable.

Wetlaid non-woven material – This material is widely used in the human field for both main drapes and towel drapes. Caution is required when fenestrating for surgery because of its low tear resistance. This material is treated for moisture resistance. Autoclavable.

Plastic material – Plastics are completely impervious. Color is noted in product descriptions.

Thermoplastic elastomer – This elastomeric material is used to make the conformable panels of the arthroscopy drapes. It has excellent stretch capability and forms a seal around the limb to control fluid during surgery.

Adhesive – Adhesive areas in our drapes are 3M adhesive squares.

Reinforcement materials –

Absorbent non-woven – This material will absorb fluids but maintains a very high wet strength. The underside of this material has a poly film coating so that collected fluids will not strike-through to the drape itself.

Polyfoam – This closed cell polyurethane foam has good strength along with a non-skid surface for instruments. Closed cell foam will not absorb moisture.

Impervious non-woven – Impervex material with the plastic film exposed. Used in our larger laparotomy sheets, it minimizes sticking of the bowel when used for equine colic surgery.

Unfenestrated Drapes

Unfenestrated drapes are available wrapped and sterile or non-sterile. For non-sterile drapes add "NS" to the product number. These drapes may also be included in custom kits. Call for details.

Small Animal Specialty Sheets

The drapes featured on this page are constructed using our Impervex material and clear plastic. The Impervex material provides superior barrier properties and excellent fluid control. The clear plastic anesthesia window is located at the head end of the drape to allow the surgeon or technician to monitor the patient without moving the drape. Drapes are available in both orthopedic and laparoscopic configurations as well as unfenestrated (previous page).

Incise Drapes

Incise drapes are thin plastic drapes with an adhesive coating on one side. The drape is applied to the surgical site and the incision made through the drape. The drape provides a sterile field and the adhesive prevents skin microbes from entering the incision. Adhesives may be impregnated with antimicrobial solution. Vet. Surgical Resources offers 3M incise drapes in several sizes with and without antimicrobial solution. 3M antimicrobial incise drapes are marketed under the Ioban 2™ brand. Plain 3M drapes are marketed under the Steri-Drape™ brand.
